

Festival Season Is Back—Here's What Everyone Is Wearing This Year

Animal print, cutouts and Y2K silhouettes were dominating the festival grounds.

After spending two years in isolation, being able to step into the sunshine, listen to live music and wear a fun outfit is what we've been dreaming about. Thanks to Pandora*, we were able to head to weekend 1 of Coachella Valley Music and Arts Festival to experience our first festival in all its glory. While we got to witness some of the incredible acts at Coachella (Yes, we're still thinking about Harry Styles and Canada's own Shania Twain), festivals are a breeding ground for bold, unique and colourful fits—and after two years of being cooped up inside, festival goers were ready to show up.

From cutouts (made popular by Euphoria's Maddy Perez) to crystal-inspired pieces (why own a disco ball when you can wear one?) to Y2K styles (we love a good tube top)—festival wear is back—and we're not complaining. In tandem with the festival, we had a chance to visit the Pandora Oasis, a bubblegum pink nostalgic experience, where influencers, up-and-coming musical talent and familiar faces like Charli XCX—who works with the brand on their Pandora ME collection—were sporting trends like these. To narrow it down, we've found five trends we saw out and about at Coachella that we predict will be all the rage this festival season.

Y2K

The resurgence of Y2K style has been on the rise for the past couple of years, and it hasn't shown any signs of slowing down. Dainty tank tops with fun decals and two-piece sets were easy to find on the festival grounds, paired with colourful accessories like rings and hair clips. Channel your inner Lizzie McGuire and pay homage to the early aughts.
